

Here are a few KY-specific points, and, attached is a banner with KY responses (n=71):*

- 45% of Kentucky respondents reported that they are serving youth remotely; 39% are connecting families with community resources; and 34% are serving as a meals site, delivering meals, or distributing resources to families
- Concerns regarding students are high, with 9 in 10 Kentucky respondents saying they are “extremely” or “very” concerned about their students’ mental and emotional health and their student missing opportunities for social connections with peers and caring adults. 83% are “extremely” or “very” concerned about their students experiencing learning loss.
- 79% of Kentucky respondents are “extremely” or “very” concerned about losing touch with students in need.
- Concerns regarding the future of programs are also high, with a large majority saying they are “extremely” or “very” concerned with long-term funding and the program’s future (68%), new restrictions making it cost prohibitive to offer programming (65%), and loss of funding to the program this year (63%)
- 83% of respondents are “extremely” or “very” concerned about meeting the needs of families who will need afterschool programs for longer periods of time due to school’s mix of virtual and in person teaching.
- Given what programs know about their district’s reopening plan, 37% of Kentucky providers are planning on serving students both in person and virtually this fall, 35% serving students virtually, and 18% serving students in person.
- Roughly half of programs said it was likely that they will be able to operate in their usual location this fall (52%)

*Data are based on an online survey, conducted by Edge Research between July 20th- August 31st